Behind the mask

Calling to mind the elaborately decorated masks used in the dragon and lion dances often performed during Lunar New Year parades, the three-dimensional masks featured on the stamps are a contemporary take on the long tradition of paper-cut folk art crafts created during this auspicious time of year. Simplified illustrations of the 12 zodiac animals, done in the artist's unique style, form vertical lines on the left and right sides of the pane of 20 stamps.

Utilizing orange as the predominant color — characteristic of tiger markings and said to be one of the lucky colors for individuals born during the Year of the Tiger — the tiger mask incorporates elements with symbolic meaning. Several of the patterns and details were created with the wish of Asian families to meet as well as green flowers that represent the arrival of spring, which Lunar New Year also signals in Chinese culture. The parade mask atop the tiger's head references the celebratory themes of the Chinese zodiac.

AMERICAN COMMEMORATIVE CANCELLATIONS

Day of the Dead
In recent decades, Day of the Dead has caught on in the United States as a festive celebration for all ages, but its roots stretch back to pre-Columbian Latin America. Catholic missionaries who arrived with the Spanish colonizers starting in the late 1500s introduced All Saints Day and All Souls Day to the Americas, and the indigenous peoples infused these November 1st and 2nd holy days with their own rituals around commemorating and connecting with deceased ancestors.

The modern version of Día de los Muertos, as it is known in Spanish, rose out of the activities of the 1900s. Among the groups finding their voices were Chicano artists in Los Angeles and San Francisco who sought inspiration in indigenous Mexican culture and regarded Day of the Dead as a way to affirm their heritage and build pride. They combined contemporary and traditional iconography to appeal to all generations of Mexican Americans, unite the community, and guide the general public toward a more positive understanding of Mexican culture.

Since then, hundreds of thousands of Americans from all walks of life have come to appreciate and enjoy Day of the Dead, particularly in U.S. cities with large Mexican and Central American immigrant communities. Celebrations hosted by museums, galleries, and community centers take place every November and may feature an exhibition procession, costume contest, face painting, music, dancing, and special food. At the heart of it all is the offering, or ofrenda, honoring not only departed family members but also heroes and celebrities. Often assembled by artists, ofrendas feature colorful textiles and cut-paper paper, marigolds and other flowers, candles, photographs, and mementos, as well as the iconic decorated candy on paper-molded skulls.

Kindred Spirits

A stamp artist bonds with his sculptor subject.

The studio of Edmonia Lewis was a major attraction for Americans visiting Rome in the mid-19th century, and it's easy to see why. As the first African American and Native American sculptor to earn international recognition, Lewis challenged assumptions about artists during her time. Over the course of her prolific career, she sculpted busts of prominent people and created neoclassical works incorporating African American themes, including the celebration of newly won freedoms. She also depicted her Native American heritage as peaceful and dignified.

We spoke with art instructor and stamp illustrator Alex Bostic about what it was like to honor Lewis with a stamp.

You spent a lot of time getting to know Edmonia Lewis for this project. What was that process like?

You spent a lot of time getting to know Edmonia Lewis for this project. What was that process like?

Learning about her, it was a “kindred spirits” kind of thing. She had to fight to become who she wanted to be, and I grew up similarly. My parents did not want me to be an artist — they wanted me to be an architect or an engineer, something responsible. But I took this route and became successful at it. And it was twice as hard for her, being female and African American in her time period, as it was for me being an African American male today.

There are other connections. She was a sculptor, and I took a sculpture class not long ago that changed how I work: It made me see things in a more three-dimensional way. Also, Italy is one of my favorite places on the planet — I taught a summer study abroad course there for seven years — and that’s where she was.

What part of her portrait did you enjoy working on most?

Her hair. It was a puzzle, but it was fun: the highlights, the lighting. I had to make sure that it looked like the hair was coming out of her head, not sitting on top of it like a hat, so I created many different versions. The whole portrait went through a lot of changes. My students are always surprised by that. To me, it’s fun, but to them, it’s frustrating. They say, “You mean you have to do it over?” I say, “No, I just have to do it better.” Every little tweak makes it better.

How do you hope people respond to the stamp?

I hope it makes people dive into who she is, that it makes them find books or other information about her and talk about her. Educating the public is something that is greatly needed in the Black community — people need to know about our heritage, about what we’re capable of achieving. I’m a big proponent of art, and I hope that more of our children will be artists. I want kids who grew up like me to get more support from their families, from the ground up.
